Dear Friend of D.C. Law Students In Court:

On behalf of D.C. Law Students in Court I'm pleased to let you know that we have retained Katherine L. Morrison as our Interim Executive Director following Mary Brittingham's resignation for medical reasons. Katherine has a proven track record of successfully leading and advising nonprofits in the Washington D.C. area for the past 20 years, during 15 of which she was the president and chief executive officer of The Campagna Center in Alexandria. More recently she has served a number of highly-regarded nonprofits as an interim executive director and as a consultant providing services including executive transition, strategic planning, board development and organizational assessment and capacity building.

Katherine is a great addition to what was already an outstanding staff. Our entire organization will benefit every day from her professional experience, judgment and skills. In addition to overseeing LSIC's day-to-day operations, Katherine will work with the organization's board of directors as it undertakes a comprehensive search for its next executive director.

As you know, D.C. Law Students in Court provides legal assistance to low-income residents of The District of Columbia and provides law students with real world litigation training. Each year third-year law students from the five participating law schools, American, Catholic, George Washington, Georgetown, and Howard universities, provide critical legal assistance to nearly 5,000 individuals and families. D.C. Law Students in Court works to fight the consequences of poverty, to prevent homelessness, and to alleviate inequalities in the justice system. Katherine's interim leadership will ensure that we continue to advance our mission during this transition period.
